Preface

As the co-director of a small scale artist in residence program (referred to AIR hereon), and a member of Res Artis for 10 years I have come to understand many different forms of AIR management. AIR first and foremost exist as a base for artists to pursue their practice, but the reasons for their existence are various and dependent upon the intention of the managing organization. In the case of art universities or academies there is a concern for art education and the training of artists. In the case of local authorities there is often an aspect of community development and tourism promotion. However in the case that AIR programs are run by artists themselves, then actual artistic practice becomes the key point of focus and the fact that the artist takes up living as another resident of a local area can be viewed as a point of particular commonality between such artist run programs.

The AIR program of Youkobo Art Space is an independent small scale residence program which holds artists at its heart, and as the very phrase "residence" suggests, it provides a space for artists to pursue their practice with freedom, and builds a firm link with artists who have a strong awareness of the importance of a comfortable environment for creative production. Here artists are able to undertake a stay of up to 6 months and may also be accompanied by their partner and/or children. Furthermore as Youkobo also undertakes the development of activities as a form of community art centre, in parallel to its other programs, artists also have the opportunity to engage with the local area upon a deeper level.

In participating in the Res Artis General Meetings which take place once every two years I have felt that the main issues which can be shared between AIR leaders and associated organizations (including arts councils, foundations, education institutions, artists etc), along very different social backgrounds depending on each country, are focused upon academic discourse on art and cultural theory, cultural economics and other popular issues of art. However up until now there has been little discussion upon the issues of microresidencies, which in fact can be said to make up 1/4 of Res Artis members.

Within this context we began to seriously investigate the state of microresidencies in 2011. This report included a collation of this survey and is put together in hope of instigating further discussion and debate concerning microresidencies.

The Term "Microresidence"

This term was suggested to Youkobo Art Space in a short essay written by New York based artists Luis Recoder and Sandra Gibson during their stay at Youkobo in 2005

Youkobo Art Space: A Micro-Flexible Arts Community in Tokyo

A Brief Essay of Appreciation by Luis Recoder and Sandra Gibson 2005

I. An Attempt to Define Microresidencies

The worldwide network of artist in residencies, Res Artis, has joined numerous members and promoted the development of artist in residencies across the globe. Currently (April 2012) there are over 400 members of this network. These include not only large scale institutions, but residencies of all shapes and sizes, drawing us to question how we in fact define an artist in residence. What is the function of a residence? What are their benefits? The answer to this depends upon each residence itself and each artist.

In tackling these issues it is important to consider the different environments and social context in which each residence engages in its activities. Amongst such varying conditions we must also examine the awareness of society towards artists, their position within such a social framework and the importance of their artistic engagements.

Today at a time when the development of independent artist spaces initiated by artists and art organizations, for the purposes of promoting artistic and cultural exchange, is gaining further ground, autonomous, artist run, grass roots residence programs are also spreading worldwide. The growth of such small scale residence programs surely points towards a new direction for AIR.

Further to understanding the possibilities of residence programs and their significant role, microresidencies are joining in a movement to create a platform which joins together a range of different small scale groups and organizations in mutual support and collaboration.

This research was initiated by Youkobo Art Space, but we believe it is vital to encourage a de-centralized network in which each microresidence member takes responsibility and wish to foster a discussion in which each member can take equal part, adding their own contribution to the network itself.

What is a microresidence ?

- Small Scale (in terms of size of facilities)
- Small Scale (in terms of budget)
- Artist Run
- Independent
- Grass Roots
- Highly Flexible

High level of support for artists

Taking special care of human relationships

While we are aware of the ambiguity of the term "microresidence", we would like to propose that even if not all of the above categories are met, residencies which fulfill the majority of these conditions may be defined as "microresidencies", and while using such a subjective phrase it is up to each organization to determine their own position.

In the ongoing development of this network we hope to give focus to the macro possibilities of the micro.

II. An Examination of Microresidencies Results and Analysis of Microresidence Survey

Between August 2011-June 2012 Youkobo Art Space, Youkobo sent out a survey to 164 different residence programs across the world which we felt may correspond with the term "Microresidence".

1. Objective and Outline of the Survey

The intention of this survey was to gain an insight into the range of small scale independent residence programs being facilitated world wide, the kind of support they offer to artists, the emphasis of their programs, their organization and vision towards a proposed "microresidence network".

Identification of Suitable Residencies for this Survey

These residency programs were identified through the information gained through the following resources and network. A list of the residencies approached may be found in the Appendix II-1: List of Microresidencies Approached

Survey Data

From the 164 residence facilities approached we received 30 responses from across Europe, Asia, Oceania and the Americas. Here in this interim report we have attempted to collate and analyze these responses. We do not claim these results to show a universal trend in microresidencies and our sources of data are of rather limited number and only from certain regions of the world so can not be said to representative of microresidencies in general, however from the answers we have very kindly received from these surveys we have been able to put together an overview of information which includes residence programs from many different regions of the world, working in many different circumstances. We hope this survey will encourage an appreciation of these differences as well as commonalities between the various residence programs and provide the first step in examining the presence and important role of microresidencies.

Part of this survey was also to gauge interest in creating a microresidence network and gain opinions on how such a network should function. Based upon the responses of each organization we have drawn up some very simple suggestions on how to move forward in the formation of this network, which we hope you may all still have interest to be part of.

For a list of residencies which responded to the survey please view Appendix II-3: List of Responding Microresidencies

2. Analysis of Collected Data (from the replies of 30 microresidencies)

Below we have analyzed the gathered data through a series of pie charts which enable us to visualize information on the following details of the responding microresidencies:

Region, type of organization, residence duration, residence period, support offered to artists, occupancy capacity of facilities, sources of funding and budget, method of selecting artists, approach to promotion and various other information. Furthermore qualitative data which can not be put into such a format is collated at the end.

The largest number of residencies are based in Europe, shortly followed by Asia (half of which are based in Japan), a significant number are also based in Oceania, with a minority of respondents coming from the Americas, while no responding residencies are based in Africa.

13 out of the 30 residencies responding to the questionnaire are currently res artis members

Type of Organization

■ Artist Run ■ Independent ■ Association
■ Company ■ Non-profit ■ government

Most organizations define themselves as artist run or independent. The consciousness towards “artist run” particularly high amongst the responding group.

Residence Duration

■ 2 weeks ■ up to 1 month ■ up to 2 month
■ up to 3 month ■ up to 6 months ■ up to 1 year

Most residence programs can cater up to a 3 month duration of residence, with a significant percentage being focused on 1-2 monthly residence projects.

The strong majority of residence facilities hold their programs throughout the year

Over half of the organizations define their residence program as both artist and community focused. One third of the organizations position themselves as artist focused and only 13% define themselves as community focused.

There is a wide spectrum of art forms supported by the residencies, with visual art being a core focus, accompanied by design, music, writing and performance.

Support provided to artists is mainly focused on production costs, as well as significant support provided towards accommodation, daily expenses and studio.

There a wide range of different artists participating in these programs, with a marginal lead being taken by mid-career and studio based artists, along with significant presence of young, full time and community based artists.

The majority of residence programs cater for small numbers of artists at any one time ranging between 1-5 persons

More than one 40% of all income for residence programs comes from earned income, illustrating that micro-residencies often depend on being self-sustaining. Furthermore with 18% of income coming from individual contributions this reflects the dependence on individual funds and personal dedication to such programs. However in counter to this over one quarter of funding is relied upon from government sources.

This demonstrates that the majority of microresidence programs work on a small budget under 50,000USD

Models based on open calls, review panels and recommendations are most prevalent amongst the residence programs

Art listing sites are most heavily relied upon in the promotion of residence programs, followed by blogs, websites and flyers

Expectations towards the Artist

- Able sell work
- Workshop
- exhibition
- public event
- Able to part-time work
- Artist talk
- Report

Generally artists are expected to hold an artist talk as part of their residence program followed by 15% expected to hold an exhibition, as well as being able to undertake part time work and sell their work.

Public Program

- Workshop
- Exhibition
- Education
- Artist Talk
- Expedition
- Symposium
- Cultural Events

As part of the residence program it is often the case that the artist engages with the local public through exhibitions, workshops and artist talks.

Artist Follow-up

■ Questionnaire ■ Email/Skype ■ Future Use
■ Recommend others ■ Collaboration ■ Artist Report

As one may predict dialogue between the residence organization and participating artist after the residence program is largely conducted online via email and skype etc, however there is also a significant outcome of future collaborations emerging between the artist and organization and recommendations towards further participating artists.

Facilities for Local Artists

■ Studio ■ Gallery ■ Event Space
■ Meeting Space ■ Rehearsal Space ■ Library

Generally all the spaces surveyed provided some level of facilities for local artists as well as the residence artists. These are largely centred on studio spaces, meeting spaces and event spaces and gallery spaces.

Most organizations are not only concerned with running an artist in residence program but have a large range of other activities which are reflected in this graph, with workshops, exhibitions and research appearing to be a particular focus.

The graph demonstrates that there is no single answer to such a question however "independence" is a highly important factor in such a determination, with small scale and alternative also being provided with particular emphasis.

What is expected of a microresidence network?

■ Publicity ■ Advice ■ Exchange ■ Collaboration ■ Network ■ Funding

We would like to understand more about the benefits which potential members would wish to gain from joining our proposed network. We can see here clearly the greatest demand is for exchange, then followed by a strong urge to collaborate and share advice, while if such activity could also contribute to the publicity of the organizations this would also be welcome.

Qualitative Data

We also asked a range of qualitative questions which can not be collated into simple graphic form but the responses are listed here below.

Why did you create a residence?

- Meeting point for creators
- International and cultural exchange
- Time and space for experimentation
- Support for young artists
- Improve local understanding of art and culture
- Distributing info about the world through artists – broadening awareness
- Multicultural cross media dialogue
- Professional development
- Growing creative communities
- Inspire new actions by new setting
- Collaboration

- Engage new context
- Critical discussion
- Local education

What is the role of a microresidence?

Don't know what is micro

- An alternative to institutions
- An alternative economy
- Individual driven which has + and – points
- A space more personal and with more freedom
- Support for young artists
- Connecting with community
- Quick turnaround

Issues you would like to deal with

- Need for alternative space
- Need to share experiences and audience
- How to get funding
- Strengthen grass roots activities
- Alternative economy
- Improve programming
- Make connections with curators and writers
- Building community

How should members cooperate as part of the network?

- Residency exchange
- Directors/staff/ researcher exchange
- Collaboration project between artists in different residencies on set topic
- Exchange experiences ideas
- Joint workshops
- Research collaboration

3. Summary

The data gathered from the questionnaire responses indicates clearly the high range of diversity between microresidencies, the category itself adding to the widening of our understanding of artist in residence programs.

In summary we may discern that the organizations which gave their support to this survey were concentrated in Europe, Asia and Oceania, areas which Youkobo already has particular links with. The slight majority of residencies are in fact not members of Res Artis, indicating that there is no comprehensive database of artist in residence programs. A great number of these residencies are artist run or independent organizations, indicating how autonomy and the role of the artist are central to such programs. These programs generally run for up to 3 months at a time, throughout the year and give equal emphasis to supporting both artists (of many different backgrounds) and communities, in not only the field of visual art but many other creative genres. Yet the motivations of each organization towards establishing a microresidence are extremely wide ranging and reflect the diverse philosophy of each centre, with some wishing to provide support for the development of the individual artist, while others look towards the wider cultural and social impact of artistic exchange.

The funding conditions of these organizations also reflect that microresidencies are micro in terms of budget too, with the majority working with a budget of under 50,000USD, which is largely earned income, demonstrating how microresidencies have pursued a self sustaining system and alternative economy in which over-reliance upon funding support is avoided. Having said this a significant proportion of residencies do receive public funding which points to a particular recognition which even small scale residencies have begun to gain.

Each residency is highly active in the provision of a public program, which gives the resident artists the opportunity to engage with wider local communities, while the local art community are also often provided with various facilities by the organizations. The strong ties which are formed between the artists and microresidence organizations may also be found in the fact that in addition to continuous dialogue via email etc. the relationship between the two parties is often developed through further collaboration or recommendation of other artists after the initial residence has been completed.

As to their vision of microresidencies and the possibilities of their network the organizations have a strong sense of microresidencies being defined not only by their small scale but also through their autonomous independent position and their function as an alternative to large scale long established programs. In considering the role of microresidencies here again an emphasis is placed on the personal relations between artist, host and local community, while the freedom given to artists to pursue their own ideas is also highlighted. In joining a network they greatly anticipate the opportunity for collaboration which presents their willingness to connect and work with each other, engaging in exchange and sharing advice, while also seeking the opportunity for increased visibility and publicity, while many residencies naturally wish to deal with issues of funding they also have a wider vision to improve their programming, community ties, network of arts professionals and the provision towards the alternative through such a microresidence network which they hope may be achieved through joint projects focusing on artist and staff exchanges, joint research, workshops, exhibitions and general sharing of information.

III. Microresidencies and their Possibilities of Network

In order to seek out the possibilities of a Microresidence Network 160 different microresidencies were approached world wide with a request to complete a questionnaire, amongst which 30 residencies actively responded to the survey, sharing highly insightful information. Through the analysis of this data we have been able to discern the following potentials.

Microresidencies have become a global phenomenon and with numerous backgrounds to their instigation, including development from shared artist studios, re-utilization of disused spaces and community engagement through art, such residencies will continue to grow in widening diversity.

Amongst such a diversity of individual residencies pursuing their independent activities with such a range of objectives what necessity is there for such a network? And if there is such a need what form should this network take?

If we take a long term perspective to building a sustainable platform perhaps it is most suitable if each residence may actively participate with freedom in a de-centralized network.

In order to question the role of microresidencies within both the art world and wider society, and to provide greater visibility to this significant presence we aim in particular to pursue the following areas.

1. To make clear the role and position of microresidencies
2. Share advice and experiences in tackling issues which microresidencies face
3. Pursue new forms of collaboration/cooperation and widen the vision of residence programs

In order to implement such objectives Youkobo has engaged in various activities. In December 2011 as an "Open Talk About Microresidencies" the directors of artist run residencies from Singapore, Vietnam and Itoshima city, Fukuoka prefecture, gathered together for the first debate upon the possibilities of a Microresidence Network. Following this Youkobo continued to facilitate a regular series of public events under the title of "Open Talk About Artist in Residencies" in which artists who have direct experience in joining microresidence programs shared their experiences, while also engaging in critical dialogue with the residence host as to the benefits of the program and how they may be further improved. Furthermore this October and November 2012 a wide range of microresidence leaders from around the world will be gathering in Tokyo, and we will discuss and debate in detail which direction the network should take from here.

In addition to this in order to further the visibility of microresidencies and widen awareness towards their diverse presence we aim to publish a microresidence directory in early 2013.

On the basis of this interim report of microresidence research we greatly anticipate the further development of debate and engagement between microresidencies and look towards a microresidence network which is able to offer something which will enrich all of our individual engagements, the possibilities of which start from here.

APPENDIX

I. A Letter from Luis Recoder and Sandra Gibson

Youkobo Art Space: A Micro-Flexible Arts Community In Tokyo

A Brief Essay of Appreciation by Luis Recoder and Sandra Gibson

What makes Youkobo Art Space unique as an artist's residency is its intimacy of scale – or more to the point: Youkobo Art Space as micro-residency.

In an impromptu presentation at Youkobo, we spoke about what makes this particular residency so extraordinarily different than the others and came to the conclusion that it had to do with “smallness of scale” coupled with “vastness of flexibility.”

The “micro” in terms of size coupled with the “macro” in terms of the flexible.

Which goes to say that nearly everything is possible at Youkobo. The artist is completely free to explore, interpret, and personalize what Youkobo offers as “art space.”

What is “art space” at Youkobo Art Space?

It is an ensemble or network of spaces in constant flux: studio, gallery, residency.

For example, the studio can also be used as a gallery annex. And/or a residency accommodation can be easily converted into a studio space.

One space drifts into another, is permeable by and through the other.

Question: What accounts for Youkobo's exceptional disposition towards the flexible? Answer: The unprecedented collaborative venture of a co-directorial couple-team - Hiroko and Tatsuhiko Murata-san. Not only do they understand the needs and requirements of each and every artist who arrives at Youkobo but they are also frequently asking the artist-in-resident: How to make Youkobo a better place for artists?

Youkobo is that “better place” partially due to the solicitation of artist's input and suggestion. And this gives the artist a sense that he/she is an active participant in the shaping of a visionary art center.

Micro as the micro-management of operation, with only two directors at the helm.

Micro as a concise, yet poignant, measurement of the social.

AIRs vol.1 「アーティスト・イン・レジデンスのほんとうのはなし」

アーティスト・イン・レジデンスでの経験を展示作品でみせるドロップ・イン・ギャラリーとトークやプレゼンなど参加型のラウンジ・カフェを期間限定でオープン。各地のAIRプログラムについて「そこはどんなところ?」「そこで何をしたの?」といった話はアーティスト同士でも以外に話す機会がありません。アーティストおよび運営者のゆるやかな繋がりや情報交換の場となるとともに、経験のない方にも事実以上に美化することなく「ほんとうのこと」を提示したいと思います。

アーティストが一定期間滞在し、創作活動する「アーティスト・イン・レジデンス(以下AIR)」に関して日本でも自治体や民間から新たなプログラムが生まれ、議論が活発に行われるようになってきました。しかし、実際に国内外のAIRを滞在経験したアーティストたちの声を聞く機会はそれほどありません。「AIRs-滞在制作の可能性-」はAIRにおいてアーティストが実際に「滞在」し「制作」する部分に焦点をあて、アーティスト、運営組織、地域コミュニティを結ぶAIRをアートの一つの方法論として提示します。アーティストの視点に立脚したAIRの現状や未来の可能性についての対話、AIR本来のオルタナティブな場としての可能性を立体的に捉えなおす試みは、その存在意義と本質を明確にする端緒になりうると考えます。この企画は長期的な試みとして提案され、報告書として出版する予定です。これまでの美術のシステムには収まりきれない活動の形態、社会との関連性、国際間の異文化交流を積極的に模索し研究するための一石を投じます。

Drop in Gallery

A collection of information on AIR from various regions of the world, along with a survey of artists who have participated in AIR programs

Venue: Youkobo Art Space

Introduction

In Japan a movement towards discussion and debate has developed upon "Artist in Residence (AIR) programs" in which artists undertake a temporary stay and engage in creative practice. However up until now there has not been much opportunity to hear the direct voice of artists who have joined in participation of such programs. Here in the consideration of the possibilities of AIR, we wish to give focus to the area of actually staying and making, proposing AIR, in their ability to connect artists, art organizations and local communities, as one approach to art. Examining AIR from the perspective of artists and discussing their future possibilities, we wish to attempt to concretely grasp the essential ability of AIR to provide an alternative art platform and to bring greater clarity to importance of AIR and their key features. This event is proposed as a long term engagement in which we plan to collate as a report. We hope this will form one stone in the building towards research in connection with the conditions of the current art system, the relation of art with society and the promotion of international cross cultural exchange.

Event Overview

Taking "AIRs – The Possibilities of Artist in Residencies" as this event's theme here artists who have had experience of joining artist in residence programs will share their encounters through slides, video and skype, providing an opportunity to exchange information in a relaxed atmosphere and reconsider the true essence of AIR. Over 3 consecutive Saturdays artists here have the chance to connect with other artists and art organizers to speak directly of what the residence was like, and what they did there, honestly informing those who may have no experience of residencies as to how it really was. In parallel to this "artist lounge" Youkobo also presents a "drop in gallery" in which documents, interviews, video and work relating to the artists' time spent in various residencies is exhibited. Furthermore a AIR information corner is also provided, along with a survey of artists experiences of AIR.

DAY 1 (Open Forum)

Part 1 “Joining Artist in Residencies”

This was a forum in which artists who have joined in AIR programs could share their experiences with artists seeking to join such programs. In this event Fumiko Kobayashi and Tatsuo Inagaki introduced the artist residence programs which they had participated in. Kobayashi commented upon her stay at Hweilan International Artists Workshop (Taiwan), KHOJ KOLKATA (India), GERTRUDE CONTEMPORARY ART SPACES (Australia), and Stiftung Künstlerdorf Schöppingen (Germany), displaying a wealth of experience in joining foreign residence programs through which she has built up a significant career while taking Japan as her base. Inagaki meanwhile introduced the residencies at Royal Holloway, University of London (UK), Nordic Artists' Centre in Dale (Norway), 18th Street Arts Center (USA), Aomori Contemporary Art Centre, Grizedale Arts (UK) and Compeung (Thailand), through which his artistic practice has come to form a process of engagement with local people, strongly lining the participation in AIR programs to the development of his work and career. Furthermore Ritsu Yoshino of the Asian Cultural Council presented, from the perspective of an organization which supports artists to undertake residencies, the contents and objective of ACC's program. Here there was deeper consideration towards the act of temporarily undertaking a base for work and everyday life overseas, and it was highlighted that such opportunity allows the artist to further their network within society while also developing motivation towards their next career step.

Part 2 Artist-Run AIR (Microresidence)

Here the artists Shih Yun Yeo (INSTINC, Singapore) and Hirofumi Matsuzaki (Studio Kura, Fukuoka) who run their own artist in residence programs presented about their activities. They also have an exchange program where they host the same artists and in addition to providing an environment in which artists can make work they also provide examples of how AIR programs may instigate exchange amongst artists and the building of a network.

After the forum we offered a tour of the Youkobo facilities, and introduced the residence artist Stina Fisch who held an open studio session and explained about her work. In the gallery Kyougo Matsumoto opened up his site of production where he was preparing for his solo exhibition to start the next month and presented a video work which he developed in a residence held through Youkobo's network with the Finnish residence "Art Break".

Day 2 (Closed Network Meeting)

Directors and associates of microresidencies in Singapore, Vietnam, Fukuoka and Tokyo came together to share in discussion of their experiences in running microresidencies and the possibilities of developing a microresidence network. The following participants joined this meeting – Tatsuhiko Murata (Youkobo Art Space co-director), Shih Yun Yeo (INSTINC director, Singapore), Hirofumi Matsuzaki (Studio Kura director, Fukuoka) and via Skype Linh Phoung Nguyen (Nha San Studio representative, Vietnam).

At first there was an introduction to the research already instigated by Youkobo Art Space into microresidencies, sharing information gathered upon the various forms of residence program, their trends and characteristics which have been identified through analysis and going on to set the scene for debate as to what form a microresidence network should take and what possibilities it may hold. (Note)

In the first half of the meeting each member introduced their motive for initiating a residence, along with its background and their model of management while sharing their perspectives upon the importance of microresidencies. In the second half they engaged in debate as to how to build an effective network which can ensure mutual benefit for all members, while increasing the visibility of microresidencies. Here it was suggested that the important role of microresidencies consists of offering an opportunity for young artists with limited experience to bypass the large scale institutional residencies and take on a space where they may engage in various experiments, while these residencies also flexibly adapt to the needs of the artists and build up long term relationships through this. With this objective in mind various concrete means of creating a platform for the sharing of information, resources, advice and promoting collaboration and international exchange were considered.

There were various proposals as to the structure of such a network but there was a consensus on the point that the network should rest responsibility on each member in a decentralized format. With the future view to building a website, it was suggested that at first that the members engage in dialogue first via Facebook, Ustream and various other SNS. There were also a range of suggestions of how the members may cooperate together through an artist database, the sharing of critics/curators contacts, collaborative touring exhibitions and exchange programs for example.

Through this discussion the direction of the microresidence network became clearer. The communication between members was deepened and various collaboration projects between Youkobo, INSTINC and Studio Kura have been moulded. Continuing on from this 2012 has become a year in which the possibilities of a microresidence network have been given even greater space for debate.
